

Content Outline

Collin Lloyd

10/27/25

Project Title: The United States Capitol Website

The United States Capitol building has become a symbol synonymous with our government and our country as a whole. As a building, though, it is also rich with history, art, and architectural feats. I've long been interested in government and politics, so I think this would be a really fun website to build. Since there are so many parts and facts about the building, I'll definitely need to do a multi-page website, with a typical navigation bar along the top. I want to follow the aesthetic and vibe of the building, so I'll likely use shades of red, white, and blue, in addition to serif fonts to emphasize the tradition and authority of the building.

- Home Page
 - I'll want to focus on the building as a whole here. Will likely contain a large hero image with some sort of call to action, a brief description of the building, and all it has to offer.
- History
 - First page in nav bar. This will likely be a longer page - there's too much history to have it all down, so I'll go over the important parts with plenty of images to keep users engaged.
- Art
 - Second page in nav bar. There are a LOT of examples of art in the building - may have to split into paintings and sculpture pages. Will be heavily image based so users can see what I am talking about. May also make use of hover states so that users can view information about artists, time periods, descriptions, etc.
- Architecture
 - Third page in nav bar. The U.S. Capitol is home to a lot of architecture feats, namely the Dome. I'll also touch on the architectural style of the building (neoclassical) and the process of construction.
- Fun Facts
 - Fourth page in nav bar (also last main page). I worked on Capitol Hill for a summer, so I have some interesting fun facts that users may like to hear. This will likely be a shorter page, but will still have some fun content.
- Sources
 - Will just list the sources for my information - including Wikipedia page, image sources, and other information sources for art, architecture, and fun facts.